The above-described problems generally occur in a distributed memory environment such as a cluster system. An object of the present invention is to provide a data processing system with a function of determining a failure, which occurs in a processor executing a program in a distributed memory environment, and predicting the failure that will occur, so as to prevent other processors from going into a state where they cannot operate. Another object of the present invention is to provide a distributed memory environment that prevents a program itself from waiting for a network or a processor other than itself when the program executes a system call. The object indicated above is accomplished by the provision of a data processing system comprising a processor executing a program in a distributed memory environment; and a failure prediction unit determining a failure that has occurred in the processor, and predicting a type of the failure, wherein the failure prediction unit predicts a first failure where the program executing the program is in a deadlocked state of waiting for a network, and predicts a second failure where the program is in a deadlocked state of waiting for an execution result of a system call, while changing the program execution states, and a failure prediction unit checks a failure that has occurred in the program and predicts the type of the failure, wherein when the failure prediction unit detects a first failure, the failure prediction unit prevents the program from executing the system call, and when the failure prediction unit detects a second failure, the failure prediction unit allows the program to execute the system call, and the failure prediction unit predicts the type of the failure by performing arithmetic operations on random numbers.
